

Division of Wildlife Resources Conservation Permit Program

The Division of Wildlife Resources has issued conservation permits to generate funds for specific species since 1981. The program began with a “high bid permit” for a desert bighorn ram and has expanded over the years to include all big game species as well as cougar, bear and wild turkeys.

The conservation permit program provides a dedicated source of funding for special projects to benefit Utah’s Wildlife. The revenue received by the Division for permits is used to fund projects, which could not otherwise be funded under the Division’s normal operating budget. These special projects have included aerial surveys, transplants, radio telemetry studies, special research projects, and habitat enhancement projects. Also, the program involves conservation groups in fund-raising and projects at the local level.

The number of conservation permits authorized by the Wildlife Board is based on, the species population trend, size and distribution to protect the long-term health of the population, the hunting and viewing opportunity for the general public, both short and long term, and the potential revenue that will support protection and enhancement of the species.

Big game conservation permits are allocated for both statewide and area hunts. Statewide hunters are given expanded hunting seasons while permits for specific areas are restricted to regular seasons. One statewide conservation permit may be authorized for each conservation permit species. A limited number of area conservation permits may be authorized with a maximum of 10% of the total permits, assigned to a hunt area or combination of hunt areas, for rocky mountain bighorn sheep and desert bighorn sheep. A maximum of 5% of the permits or eight permits, whichever is less, for any unit or hunt area for the remaining conservation permit species.

As a reward to the general hunter who cannot afford to pay for a statewide conservation permit, one statewide sportsman permit is authorized for each statewide conservation permit and is offered to residents through a drawing. Sportsmen permits are offered for each of the following species: desert bighorn, bison, buck deer, bull elk, rocky mountain bighorn, rocky mountain goat, bull moose, buck pronghorn, black bear, cougar, and wild turkey.

Conservation organizations are allowed to retain 10% of the revenue raised from the sale of permits for administrative costs (permit promotions and to support organization programs). An additional 60% of the revenue may be retained and used by the conservation organization for eligible projects.

Eligible projects include habitat improvement, habitat acquisition, transplants, targeted education efforts and other projects providing substantial benefit to the species of wildlife for which conservation permits are issued.

The conservation permit rule was recently changed to allow multi-year conservation permits while still giving the option for single-year conservation permits. Multi-year permits will allow organizations to better market permits. Also, the over all-number of permits was reduced, which has resulted in more public permits.

Following are tables giving additional information on the program including: number of permits issued by year, money raised by conservation permits, and projects that have been funded by the conservation program. The organization heading indicates whether the funding came from the revenue returned to DWR or the 60% of revenue kept by an organization.
